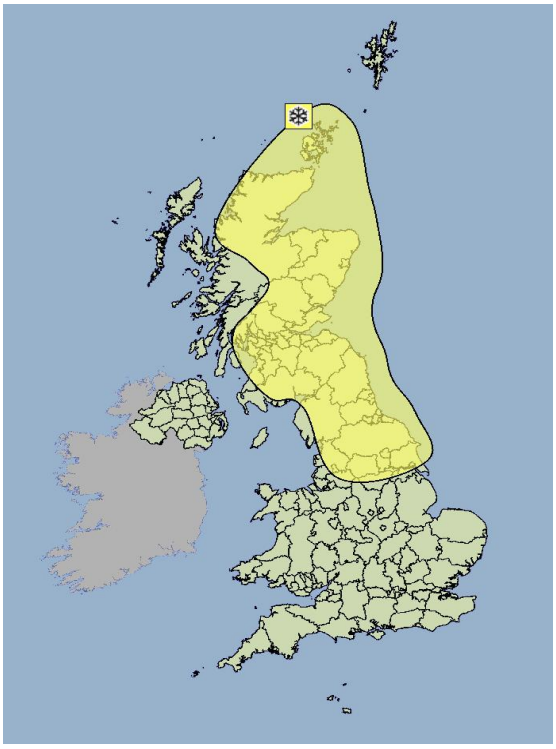
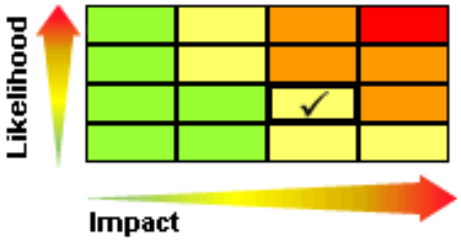
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Frequent snow showers are likely to continue feeding in from the North Sea on a very cold easterly wind. Due to the nature of showers, some places are expected to receive an additional 5-10 cm of snow per day, whereas other places nearby may only receive small amounts. Brisk winds will lead to some drifting of snow, as well as a severe wind chill, although these are expected to begin to ease through Friday.

This is an update to expand the yellow warning area.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Fri, 02nd Mar 2018 until 23:55 on Sat, 03rd Mar 2018

Snow showers are expected to continue over parts of northern Britain, bringing further accumulations of snow and a risk of icy stretches.

Further delays to travel and public transport could occur, whilst some rural communities could become or remain cut off. Further impacts to power supplies/mobile phone coverage are also possible.
